Steve is an organisational psychologist who has had over 20 years of experience in leadership, teaching, coaching and facilitating positive organisational changes with private schools, churches and in the corporate sector. He specialises in helping staff teams to understand and develop their strengths, leading to greater fulfilment in life and effectiveness at work. He also helps individuals work through career transitions.

As a speaker, Steve's use of humour and insightful practical input has made him sought after for conferences, lecturing and radio programs both here in Australia and in Hungary where he lived with his family for five years following the fall of the Berlin wall.

Steve also uses his writing to help people in their professional and leadership development. His "Leadership and Life" email is currently received by 1500 professionals worldwide and his book on professional burnout has recently been published. A parent adolescent communication inventory designed by Steve has been used in a number of research projects and articles internationally.
